

Cabin 1: Wanda Bruner

Nestled in one of Nashville's earlier additions sits the little gray cabin on Coffey Hill. Built of huge logs back in the 50's, its compact size is just right for this former milliner and current quilter. Wanda loves the country life surrounded by the dark wood ceilings, wide plank floors with wooden pegs, and a native stone fireplace.

The screened porch is where summer days are spent with a favorite book. Her Duncan Phyffe dining table, a flea market find, is a perfect place to stitch up the latest wall quilt or wool felt penny rug. You will see that she's no novice with a needle as you look over many of her award-winning designs displayed throughout her home. While living in Chicago years ago, Wanda attended the Vogue Art School and learned her craft of millinery. She still finds time to present programs on hats to local organizations and events such as the Brown County Historical Society and Brown County Art Gallery Annual Tea.
